

Building Emotional Self Awareness

The goal of this exercise is to expand your ability to name your emotions. A good emotional “vocabulary” and steady self-reflection will help us become more conscious of our emotions. We cannot develop empathy for other people’s feelings until we understand our own! And we definitely can’t manage emotions we are not aware of!

This document contains an extensive list of emotions for you to review. You may also add any words which are more typical of how you explain things, but be sure they would work in a sentence such as: “I feel _____ right now”.

At least once each day for two weeks keep a journal where you write down the emotions you felt that day. Most of us have MANY different emotions during a day. We can also feel more than one emotion at any given time!

You can use the sample worksheet on the next page if you like . . . just make copies so you have one page for each day.

Remember: This first step is just to strengthen your emotional self-awareness. Don’t worry about WHY you have the feelings – at least initially. The first step is just to notice what you are feeling and put a word to it – name it. And especially don’t worry about how to “make them go away” or “fix them”! Just notice them for now.

Emotions Described: I feel _____ or, I am feeling _____.

Worksheet instructions

- list as many emotions as you can describe
- don’t worry if they seem to contradict each other...that is normal (we can be sad and happy at the same time)
- notice over the course of a day if there is a lot of variation, or if you are repeating one feeling over and over
- notice of the course of several days if there is a lot of variation or if you are repeating one feeling over and over
- if you are repeating one word over and over, and you want to know why you might be feeling that way, try to get to the bottom of it by using the “Five Why’s Technique.” For example, if you are repeatedly saying “I am angry” try to determine why by asking “Why” at least 5 times. So you might say, “I am angry because my boss yelled at me.” Why does that make me angry? “Because I feel disrespected.” Why does that make me angry? “Because I am a human being and I deserve to be treated with respect, dignity and kindness.” Why does that lack of kindness and respect make me angry? “Because too many people in my life treat me that way . . .” (Now we’re getting somewhere!)

- Once you ask “Why” 5 or more times, look at the list of words again. You might be able to add another word to describe your feelings. Maybe you are angry AND sad...or angry AND stuck (or misunderstood, or resentful, or even vengeful). Putting a finer point on defining what we are feeling brings us closer to understanding ourselves and our options.
- Please consult a qualified therapist or counselor if you find that you have persistent feelings of sadness, anger or thoughts which scare you.

Worksheet: Emotional Self-Awareness
